Description

The Pacific Ocean is the most expansive geographical feature on Earth. Included in its domain are thousands of atolls, smaller islands and, depending on how its boundaries are defined, several larger islands and island groups. Members of the grass family, Poaceae, are almost ubiquitous and are widespread across the Pacific and this detailed key provides a taxonomic reference of the grasses growing throughout this region.

Author information

W D Clayton is an honorary research associate in the Herbarium at Kew. Neil Snow is a botanist based at the Bishop Museum, Honolulu, Hawaii.
